Better yet just refund it to the payment method. I can't buy anything on your overpriced, garbage site with that credit amount anyways.

You forgot to mention 'also not valid on our 'conditional sales' where we broadly advertise deep discounts and when you choose your size, if it's within a normal average size for your gender, you find the price is either undiscounted or actually inflated.' I refuse to let your organization continue to conduct business matters in this blatantly deceptive manner. It's insulting, fraudulent, dishonest, and frankly, right within your wheelhouse. Which is precisely why your reputation will continue to plummet, and I will do my best, as outlined in my steps in our prior correspondence, to ensure that your decline continues proportional to your regulatorily-proscribed conduct.

Supplemental Notice - Additional Consumer Protection Violations: False Advertising and Bait-and-Switch Pricing Practices

This correspondence supplements my prior formal notices dated 12/1/2025 and 12/18/2025 regarding Farfetch's systematic consumer protection violations. While Farfetch has now provided monetary resolution for my individual transaction (refund plus store credit), I am proceeding with public advocacy and regulatory escalation as previously outlined because the issues extend far beyond my personal experience.

Discovery of additional deceptive practices during my continued engagement with Farfetch's platform has revealed violations even more egregious than those initially documented.

False Advertising and Conditional Pricing Scheme

Farfetch engages in systematic bait-and-switch pricing practices that constitute false advertising under both state and federal law:

The Deceptive Pattern:

1. Farfetch advertises site-wide promotional sales (e.g., "Extra 20% Off Sale Items," "Up to 50% Off," seasonal promotions) prominently throughout the website, email marketing, and social media
2. Consumers click on items displayed at advertised sale prices
3. Upon selecting size/color variants, pricing suddenly changes to full retail price or inflated pricing
4. When questioned, Farfetch attributes pricing discrepancies to "independent marketplace sellers who set their own prices"

Why This Constitutes Deceptive Trade Practice:

Farfetch cannot simultaneously:

- Advertise site-wide sales using Farfetch branding and promotional messaging
- Collect payment through Farfetch's payment processing system
- Control the entire customer-facing user experience
- Then disclaim responsibility for pricing by attributing it to third-party sellers

This represents a more sophisticated version of classic bait-and-switch advertising. Farfetch benefits from increased traffic and conversion driven by advertised sales, collects transaction fees on all purchases, but avoids honoring advertised pricing by hiding behind the "marketplace" designation that was never disclosed to consumers.

Specific Legal Violations:

Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45)

- Advertising prices that are not actually available at checkout constitutes deceptive advertising
- Bait-and-switch tactics are explicitly prohibited under FTC guidance
- Failure to clearly disclose material conditions (that advertised sales may not apply depending on seller) violates truth-in-advertising requirements

Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (La. R.S. 51:1401 et seq.)

- False or misleading advertising regarding price
- Advertising goods with intent not to sell as advertised
- Bait advertising: advertising goods at specific prices when unable/unwilling to supply reasonable quantities at advertised price

State Consumer Protection Statutes (Nationwide Application) Similar violations exist under consumer protection statutes in all 50 states, as Farfetch operates a nationwide e-commerce platform affecting consumers across all jurisdictions.

Material Impact on Consumer Decision-Making

The advertising-to-checkout pricing discrepancy is not a minor technical glitch—it fundamentally affects consumer purchasing decisions:

- Consumers allocate time to browse based on advertised sales
- Shopping cart decisions are made based on displayed pricing
- Size/variant selection should not trigger price changes absent clear advance disclosure
- Consumers who discover inflated pricing at checkout have already invested time and effort (sunk cost fallacy encourages completing purchase despite deception)

Farfetch's Attempted Resolution Does Not Address Systematic Issues

While Farfetch provided me with both refund and store credit, this resolution:

1. Does not address the ongoing deceptive practices affecting thousands of daily transactions
2. Does not constitute acknowledgment of wrongdoing or policy change
3. Appears designed to silence individual complaints rather than remedy systematic violations
4. Does not prevent identical harm to future consumers

This is precisely why public advocacy and regulatory intervention remain necessary despite individual monetary resolution.

Updated Scope of Public Advocacy Campaign

My previously outlined social media and public advocacy campaign will now include comprehensive documentation of Farfetch's false advertising and conditional pricing practices, including:

- Screenshot documentation of advertised sales versus checkout pricing
- Video walkthroughs demonstrating the bait-and-switch pattern
- Compilation of consumer complaints across review platforms documenting identical experiences
- Analysis of how Farfetch benefits financially from deceptive advertising while disclaiming liability

- Step-by-step guides for affected consumers to file FTC and state AG complaints specifically addressing false advertising
- Aggregation of potential class members who experienced pricing bait-and-switch

Supplemental Regulatory Complaints

I am filing supplemental complaints with the FTC and Louisiana Attorney General specifically addressing the false advertising and bait-and-switch pricing violations documented above. These complaints will include:

- Specific examples of advertised promotions versus actual checkout pricing
- Documentation of Farfetch's attribution of pricing to "marketplace sellers" as liability shield
- Analysis of nationwide scope and consumer harm
- Request for investigation into advertising practices and enforcement action

Demand for Record Preservation - Expanded Scope

My prior litigation hold demand is hereby expanded to include preservation of all documents, communications, and data related to:

- Promotional advertising content (site banners, email campaigns, social media promotions, influencer partnerships)
- Pricing algorithms and display logic (how sale prices are determined, how size/variant selection affects displayed pricing)
- Marketplace seller pricing agreements (any contractual terms regarding participation in site-wide promotions)
- Internal communications regarding promotional advertising (decisions about how to advertise sales given marketplace model)
- Consumer complaints regarding pricing discrepancies (customer service tickets, refund requests related to pricing issues)
- Revenue and profit analysis (how promotional advertising affects traffic, conversion, and Farfetch commission revenue)

Final Statement

Farfetch's business model appears deliberately structured to capture maximum benefit (advertising-driven traffic, transaction fee revenue, brand prestige) while minimizing accountability (marketplace liability shield, third-party seller attribution). The false advertising component makes this scheme even more problematic than initially documented.

I provided Farfetch multiple opportunities for good-faith engagement. Farfetch chose monetary settlement without addressing systematic violations. Public advocacy, regulatory complaints, and exploration of class action litigation will proceed as outlined in my prior correspondence.

The 48-hour response window from my previous notice has expired. This supplemental notice is provided for completeness but does not reopen settlement discussions. Public campaign launch will proceed at my discretion.

Dear Mr. Kinslow,

I completely understand how price differences can be disappointing and frustrating.

Allow me to clarify that FARFETCH operates as a global luxury fashion marketplace, offering a wide selection of brands sourced from a carefully curated network of stock points and partners located worldwide. Since our partners are based in different countries and operate with different commercial policies, the same item and its sizes may be offered at different prices – because the different sizes may be available from different partners. Variations can be influenced by other factors, including the recommended retail price set by the brand and applicable import duties and taxes.

Please rest assured that FARFETCH always displays the lowest available price for an item at the time of purchase. Prices are determined by each seller and the value you see in the U.S. website/app already includes applicable import duties and taxes based on both the boutique's location and the destination country. Where applicable, shipping fees and additional domestic taxes may be added during checkout, depending on your State.

While we understand that price differences can be disappointing, they are a natural result of our marketplace business model. I sincerely appreciate your understanding and hope this explanation has addressed your concerns.

Best regards,

Patricia

For future reference, assume anyone with an IQ over 7.5 understands exactly what you are, what you do, and why you do it. An essay is unnecessary to explain away a fundamentally dishonest business practice. Was Farfetch the first ever multi-platform, global, luxury, who cares? And if it wasn't, did your forefathers operate in the same manner that you do?

You had the jeans returned I noticed. After all that huff and puff about me rerouting the package. Well, here's the thing. It was never about money. It was always about the absolute disdain I have for your company for all the reasons outlined earlier. Rest assured, I will not only follow through on my prior statements but I will literally not rest until Farfetch is humiliated, embarrassed, and exposed, for the robber barons you are. What that means for you and the rest of your gang? Sure, an FTC Complaint, a BBB review from one guy in Louisiana is certainly immaterial.

But I cannot began to voice how hard I'm going after Coupang and Farfetch in the court of public opinion and in the actual court of jurisprudential opinion. You won't be in business very much longer, and hopefully you'll have to pay restitution to those more aggrieved than I for your transgressions. Better start looking for a new job soon, maybe at an outlet shoe store, Patricia, because you clearly have zero business acumen. Enjoy the holidays over there. Things are going to get bleak very, very soon.

Sir,
We returned the jeans to the boutique, as per your request, if you'll recall.
We went to great lengths with our carrier to make that happen, as an exception, since normally these changes in transit are not allowed.
I fail to understand how complying with your request can result in further disappointment.
I wish you a peaceful and restful holiday season.
Best regards,
Patricia
