Regrettably, you did not meet my deadline.

Farfetch's silence speaks volumes. Your failure to engage confirms that this is not an isolated incident but rather a deliberate business practice designed to insulate Farfetch from liability while maintaining the appearance of direct sale to consumers.

Public Advocacy Campaign Commencing Immediately

Since Farfetch has declined the opportunity to address these violations privately, I am now taking this matter public. Effective immediately, I will be launching a comprehensive social media and public advocacy campaign across multiple platforms to inform other consumers about Farfetch's deceptive marketplace practices.

This campaign will include:

Social Media Disclosure (Twitter/X, Instagram, LinkedIn, TikTok, Reddit)

Detailed documentation of Farfetch's disclosure failures with screenshots and transaction records

Step-by-step guides for affected consumers to file FTC and state AG complaints

Public sharing of my regulatory complaint documentation as template for others

Daily updates on response (or lack thereof) from Farfetch

Aggregation of similar consumer experiences to demonstrate systematic pattern

Direct engagement with consumer protection advocates and journalists

Tagging of Farfetch's corporate partners, investors, and brand ambassadors

Consumer Protection Resource Development

Creation of centralized repository documenting Farfetch marketplace violations

FTC complaint filing tutorials specific to Farfetch's business practices

Template demand letters for other affected consumers

Coordination with other victims to document class action viability

Public tracking of complaint volume and regulatory response

Media Outreach

Pitching this story to consumer protection journalists at major publications

Providing documented evidence of systematic deceptive practices

Offering expert commentary as licensed CPA and attorney on e-commerce regulation gaps

Highlighting broader implications for luxury e-commerce marketplace accountability

Legal Community Engagement

Outreach to plaintiff's firms specializing in consumer protection class actions

Sharing comprehensive documentation of Farfetch's practices and affected consumer base

Facilitating connection between potential class members and qualified counsel

Publishing analysis of Farfetch's liability exposure under state and federal consumer protection statutes

Investor and Stakeholder Notice

Public documentation creates material risk for Farfetch and parent company Richemont
Regulatory complaints and potential class action represent significant litigation exposure
Reputational damage from widespread consumer advocacy may impact brand partnerships
Disclosure obligations may be triggered for publicly traded parent company

What This Campaign Will Accomplish

Consumer Education: Thousands of luxury consumers will learn that Farfetch operates a marketplace model with inadequate disclosure, allowing them to make informed purchasing decisions and assess whether they've been similarly affected.
Regulatory Pressure: Volume of consumer complaints to FTC and state AGs will increase dramatically, elevating enforcement priority and potential for regulatory investigation.
Class Action Development: Public aggregation of affected consumers will demonstrate numerosity and typicality required for class certification, facilitating plaintiff's counsel evaluation and potential litigation.
Reputational Impact: Farfetch's brand positioning relies on trust and luxury credibility. Systematic documentation of deceptive practices undermines that positioning and affects consumer confidence.
Investor Awareness: Public disclosure of regulatory complaints and potential class action liability creates material information relevant to Farfetch's corporate parent and stakeholders.

Sample Content

To provide clear notice of what Farfetch can expect, here is representative content from the campaign launch:

Twitter/X Thread Opening:

"📢 PSA: If you've ever bought luxury goods from @Farfetch, you might not have actually bought from Farfetch. Let me explain the lesson I just learned about their 'marketplace' scam - and why they refused to respond when I gave them 14 days to make it right."

Instagram Caption:

"I gave @farfetch two weeks to respond to formal legal notice about their deceptive marketplace practices. They chose silence. So now we go public. I'm a CPA and attorney. I've filed FTC and AG complaints. I'm exploring class action options. And I'm going to make sure every luxury consumer knows what Farfetch doesn't tell you at checkout. If this happened to you: ✓ Document everything ✓ File complaints ✓ DM your story. There's strength in numbers. #FarfetchScam #ConsumerProtection"

Reddit Post Title:

"Farfetch ignored my legal demand letter about marketplace disclosure violations - here's everything I'm doing about it [with templates for affected consumers]"

Final Opportunity

This email constitutes final notice before campaign launch. If Farfetch wishes to engage substantively within the next 48 hours, I will delay public advocacy to allow good-faith settlement discussions.

However, any response at this stage must include:

Direct communication from legal counsel (not customer service representatives)

Acknowledgment of the disclosure deficiencies I have documented

Concrete settlement proposal addressing my individual claim

Detailed explanation of policy changes to prevent future violations

Absent substantive engagement within 48 hours, I will proceed with immediate and comprehensive public advocacy as outlined above.

Preservation Demand Reiterated

My prior demand for record preservation remains in effect and is now reinforced by imminent public campaign and probable class action litigation. Farfetch must preserve all documents, communications, and data related to marketplace seller disclosure policies, website design decisions, and customer service protocols as previously specified.

I no longer expect a satisfactory response and am more showing you one last attempt at good faith before the emerging maelstrom.
