Jose,

Here is the thing: I'm unemployed, I was fired the day after I made that purchase and was nearly homeless. That is obviously not your fault, I lost my job because the company was struggling and I was the newest hire. But still, it put me in a very serious predicament. A predicament caused by policies that don't comply with regulations in my country, that result in regulatory orders costing companies a not insubstantial amount of fines, they damage credibility, anger consumers, etc. And your solution is a 20% off code? How can that possibly be a proportionate response under these circumstances? I will proceed to file complaints, publicize my encounter with outlets that have considerable messaging reach, because if I don't, companies like yours will continue doing the same shit and using the same excuses. That is, until the cost of continuing to engage in the same conduct starts having material effects on the line items in the Profit and Loss statements that your higher-ups obsess about and you start losing market share to Net-a-Porter, Mytheresa, SSENSE, and Matchesfashion.

I gave Farfetch until close of business December 2nd to respond with a resolution. That deadline has passed.

As stated in my previous email, I am now proceeding with the actions I outlined:

Regulatory Filings:

- Filing a complaint with the FTC's INFORM Act enforcement portal (15 U.S.C. § 45f violations)
- Filing with the Louisiana Attorney General's Consumer Protection Section
- Filing with the Better Business Bureau

Public Documentation:

- Documenting this entire interaction, including Farfetch's failure to provide legally required seller contact information and the inadequate response to a customer who attempted to correct an order within two hours of placement

I want to be clear: this isn't personal against you or any individual employee. This is about business practices that violate federal consumer protection statutes. The INFORM Consumers Act exists specifically to prevent marketplaces from shielding third-party sellers and leaving consumers without recourse. Farfetch's refusal to provide Bally's direct contact information—coupled with broken "seller details" links—is exactly the conduct Congress intended to prohibit.

The civil penalty structure ($53,088 per violation) exists because companies respond to material financial consequences, not customer frustration. I expect you'll forward this to your legal and compliance teams. They should know that the FTC collected $2 million from Temu for identical violations earlier this year. Farfetch can either address this proactively or wait for regulatory enforcement.

Dear Charles,

Thank you for your patience while I actively worked on your case.

I'm pleased to confirm that DHL has now reversed the shipment of your BALLY Clay Driver loafers from order RCWJ3S and the package will not be delivered to you. You may follow the shipment reversal here: DHL 7731338226.

I've just submitted an urgent request to our Finance team to process your full refund as soon as possible. Once completed, you'll receive a confirmation email. Please note that refunds may take up to 10 business days to be reflected on your statements, depending on your payment provider.

I'm truly sorry for the overall experience you've had. This does not reflect the standard of service FARFETCH aims to uphold and we hope to restore any lost faith in our services.

As a reminder, you can still take advantage of our Black Friday Extra 20% Off campaign using the code I shared in my previous email (valid on selected sale items and subject to the terms and conditions of the promotion).

I sincerely appreciate your patience and understanding throughout this process.

Should you need any further support in the future, I remain at your disposal.

Happy holidays!

Warm regards,
Jose B.

Your info: [fill in]
Company: Farfetch.com
Complaint:

I purchased shoes through Farfetch.com (online marketplace) on 11/30/2025. Wrong size was selected. Contacted Farfetch within 2 hours to correct before shipping.

Farfetch violated federal INFORM Consumers Act by:
1. Refusing to provide seller (Bally) contact information

- 2. Non-functional "seller details" link in order confirmation
- 3. Customer service stating they "cannot provide" seller contacts

Federal law (15 U.S.C. § 45f) requires marketplaces provide direct seller contact info. Farfetch's refusal left me unable to resolve simple sizing error.

Farfetch then offered 20% coupon with undisclosed restrictions making it unusable (excludes items 30%+ off, but items show different discount % by size).

Requesting: Full refund or exchange at no cost.
Amount: $[price]

Nature of complaint: Delivery Issues / Customer Service

Details:

Ordered shoes 11/30/2025 (Order RCWJ3S), wrong size selected. Contacted within 2 hours to correct. Farfetch refused to provide seller contact info and "seller details" link doesn't work - violates federal INFORM Consumers Act (15 USC 45f).

Offered 20% coupon with hidden restrictions that make it unusable. Unable to return or exchange.

Desired resolution: Full refund or free exchange for correct size.

SUBJECT LINE:
Formal Complaint - INFORM Consumers Act Violations and Deceptive Trade Practices

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

I am writing to document serious consumer protection violations by Farfetch involving systematic denial of federally-required seller contact information, deceptive promotional practices, and unconscionable delay in processing a basic product exchange.

FACT PATTERN:

INFORM Consumers Act Violations:

On November 30, 2024, I placed an order on Farfetch's marketplace for Bally shoes. Within two hours, I realized I had selected the wrong size during checkout and immediately attempted to contact the seller directly to correct the error before shipment.

The INFORM Consumers Act (15 U.S.C. § 45f) requires online marketplaces to conspicuously provide seller contact information. Farfetch's seller contact link in my order details was non-functional. When I called Farfetch customer service to obtain the legally-required seller contact information, I was denied by three separate representatives:

- November 30, 2024 at 8:13 PM CST: First customer service representative refused to provide seller contact information
- December 1, 2024 at 4:28 PM CST: Second customer service representative refused to provide seller contact information
- December 1, 2024 at 5:17 PM CST: Third customer service representative refused to provide seller contact information

This systematic denial of federally-mandated consumer information across multiple customer service interactions demonstrates either (1) deliberate policy to withhold seller contact information, or (2) complete failure to train staff on INFORM Act compliance requirements. Either constitutes a violation of federal consumer protection law.

I was eventually forced to independently locate seller contact information through alternative means. The fact that Farfetch's customer service representatives actively refused to provide this information when directly requested demonstrates institutional non-compliance with the INFORM Consumers Act.

Unconscionable Delay:

On December 1, 2024, Farfetch agreed to process a return and refund for the incorrect size. However, the package was not rerouted until December 9, 2024 - eight days after Farfetch's agreement to resolve the issue. On December 9, 2024, I was informed that the refund process may take an additional 14 days, resulting in a 23+ day resolution timeline for a sizing error I reported within two hours of purchase.

Furthermore, Farfetch's no-return policy prevented me from obtaining a refund through normal channels, effectively trapping me into a purchase made in error despite my immediate attempt to correct it within hours of ordering.

Systematic Deceptive Pricing Scheme:

As a purported gesture of goodwill for this service failure, Farfetch provided a promotional code for 20% off a future purchase, with the undisclosed restriction that it only applies to items already marked as 'on sale.'

However, Farfetch engages in an algorithmically-engineered pricing scheme that renders such promotional codes functionally worthless: The coupon contains an undisclosed restriction that it will not apply to any product where ANY size of that product has a discount deeper than the coupon value. In practice, this means:

- Unpopular sizes (e.g., women's size 5, men's size 14) are discounted at 30% or more
- Standard men's sizes 9-11 are discounted at only 10%, or remain at full price
- The 20% promotional code will not work on standard sizes because unpopular sizes of the same product have deeper discounts (30%+)
- Even when a standard size is technically 'on sale' at 10% off, the coupon is blocked by the deeper discount on unsellable sizes

This system is deliberately architected to ensure promotional codes never function on commonly-purchased sizes. Farfetch creates the illusion of sales and promotional offers while maintaining a pricing structure that algorithmically prevents customers from realizing any actual benefit.

This deceptive pricing architecture - where search results show sales that don't exist for purchasable sizes, and promotional codes contain undisclosed restrictions designed to prevent their use - constitutes material misrepresentation under applicable consumer protection laws. Farfetch advertises benefits to induce customer engagement while structuring its pricing to ensure those benefits cannot be realized.

REGULATORY COMPLAINTS FILED:

Due to Farfetch's systematic violations of federal consumer protection law and unconscionable business practices, I have filed formal complaints detailing the above fact pattern with the following agencies:

- Federal Trade Commission (FTC) - INFORM Consumers Act violations and deceptive trade practices
- Louisiana Attorney General's Consumer Protection Section - Deceptive trade practices
- Consumer Financial Protection Bureau - Marketplace compliance violations

These complaints document Farfetch's failure to comply with the INFORM Consumers Act, the systematic denial of seller contact information by customer service staff, the deceptive pricing structure that renders promotional offers unusable, and the unconscionable delay in processing returns.

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY:

Farfetch was acquired by Coupang, Inc. (NYSE: CPNG) in January 2024 for $500 million following Farfetch's near-bankruptcy. As the parent company, Coupang is now legally responsible for Farfetch's ongoing operations and compliance with consumer protection laws.

The violations documented above - systematic denial of INFORM Act-required information, algorithmically-engineered promotional fraud, and unconscionable business practices - occurred under Coupang's ownership and reflect either (1) Coupang's deliberate continuation of Farfetch's pre-existing deceptive practices, or (2) Coupang's failure to implement adequate compliance oversight following the acquisition.

Coupang publicly stated its intent to 'redefine the customer experience for luxury clients everywhere' and provide 'the most elevated experience for the world's most exclusive brands.' The practices documented in this complaint directly contradict those representations and expose Coupang to potential liability for inheriting and perpetuating a consumer fraud operation.

As a Fortune 200 company and publicly-traded entity, Coupang has fiduciary duties to its shareholders and legal obligations to consumers. This complaint serves as formal notice that Coupang's Farfetch subsidiary is engaged in systematic violations of federal consumer protection law.

REQUESTED RESOLUTION:

I am requesting the following within 2 business days:

- 1. Immediate processing of my refund without further delay
- 2. A functioning replacement promotional code with no undisclosed restrictions, or equivalent store credit
- 3. Written confirmation that Farfetch will implement INFORM Consumers Act compliance training for all customer service staff
- 4. Written confirmation that Farfetch will correct its deceptive pricing practices to ensure promotional codes function as advertised on commonly-purchased product sizes

The regulatory agencies referenced above will be monitoring your response to this complaint. Failure to respond within 2 business days will result in escalation to fashion industry trade publications documenting these systematic consumer protection violations.
