Are things clearer now for you "Sarah"?

Dear Charly,

Thank you for contacting FARFETCH. My name is Sarah, and I have read your message and understand the gravity of the situation you've described regarding your damaged delivery and your experience with our service.

Locating Your Order

I have searched our system using this email address, but I am unable to find any recent orders associated with it. To address your refund demand immediately and investigate the packaging and delivery failures you've noted, we need to locate your account.

How we can move forward:

- Order Number: Could you please provide the order number (e.g., ABC123) for the damaged shipment?
- Account Security: For your protection, we can only discuss specific order details and process refunds when contacted from the email address used to place the order.

If you are using a different email address today, please reply to us from the account linked to your purchase so I can prioritize your refund request without further delay.

We take your feedback very seriously and are committed to resolving this once we can verify the order details.

My sincerest regards,
Sarah N.

The email address you were referring to, which you clearly know, is the same email address but a Yahoo Mail account. My email was sent from this account because again, as you clearly know, nobody at your organization responds to anything other than the stock response you just provided. The order # is PFRLZ. So, thank you "Sarah" I'm sure you'll be as helpful as "Barbara" and the rest of your team.

And since you chose to respond in this fashion, I will escalate again, reaching out by phone to each of these legislators, social influencers and others as well as your competitors personally because you simply do not get it.

I'm one consumer. But one dm to Robby Starbuck, who has already been emailed, is enough to get Farfetch a brief mention and from there the amplification of "the Farfetch way" will continue through my efforts until a politician uses you as a test case for a talking point, and then as an example in crafting an executive order or bill with a cumulative effect that harms your bottom line exponentially more than the purchase of one customer.

And FedEx, well they already know about your packaging shortcomings to put it mildly and, as of 5 minutes ago via email, I provided John Ackerman with the following information:

ic packaging that appeared basically soldered on to the item with some kind of sealant and the extent that rubbing alcohol and goo gone could not remove it.

ruined, purchased from a shipper, Farfetch, notorious for packaging items in lazy fashion necessitating this kind of re-packaging by FedEx at the Memphis Hub where the item had been for 3 days, per an on-site employee at the FedEx facility on Millhaven road on Friday after querying her on the status of this item and the delay.

Thanks,

Charly

I wonder if he will truly reach out to the FedEx Hub in Memphis and scold one of his colleagues or, rather, re-direct his ire towards you, the source of the predicament from day one.

If you think I'm simply angry or incapable of following through on these actions, the email you responded to has already been sent to certain parties and influencers; those are real email addresses, try them yourself if you're curious.

In summary, eff around and find out. Because each of these engagements with you will continue following the pattern outlined above and I will not stop even if it results in destroying your reputation and credibility here domestically and your ability to do business here profitably. Have a splendid day!

Charly Wiz

My packages arrived today. One of them, the item that had to be "retaped" because it fell out of its packaging, came wrapped in what must have been heat sealing packaging. The plastic wrapping was basically soldered on the item and any effort to separate it tore material from the item itself.

Normally, I would have just placed it back in its packaging and sent it back with a return label for processing. However, this whole interaction has drained me and the time and effort I anticipate would be involved is not worth it at this juncture.

That being said, there have been zero emails from your organization responding to my concerns, from the promotional credit that was never applied at purchase to the "goodwill" credit showing as pending to the plethora of shipping problems just to simply receive an order. I expect to be compensated for your inattentive, deceptive, and manipulative practices on display throughout this ordeal.

As such, I expect a refund for the entire purchase price associated with my order. I realize I'm simply one consumer, and that a calculation has been made that I'm not worth your time. So, refund my purchase amount or I'll escalate and escalate until the point the calculation changes and you're forced to take action, if not for my own benefit than for the benefit of future customers that transact with Farfetch without understanding what they're getting into.

Subject: You Ignored My Refund Demand - Here's What Federal Escalation Actually Means

I sent you an email demanding a full refund after packages finally arrived - one damaged with heat-sealed plastic soldered onto the material itself (your "retaping" after it fell out of packaging, which a local FedEx manager confirmed happens constantly with Farfetch shipments due to lazy packaging).

You ignored it.

You said I was "not worth your time." Let me show you what escalation to federal authorities actually looks like when a foreign platform makes that calculation.

What You're Being Held Accountable For

Your operational failures created a documented case study:

- Package cleared Memphis customs 2/25 at 1:34 AM, vanished for 50+ hours
- Phantom delivery scans (4:16 PM "attempt" while I sat at my door for 3+ hours)
- FedEx confirmed Farfetch applied shipper restrictions blocking hold-at-facility during my interview week
- Customer service "Barbara" (fake name, offshore) script-reading with zero authority
- $60 promotional credit stuck "pending" for days
- Item arrives damaged from your notoriously poor packaging

Zero emails from Farfetch responding to any of this. Just silence.

This is documented evidence of a foreign platform's systematic consumer exploitation - exactly what President Trump's executive orders target.

The Trump Administration Framework Targeting Foreign E-Commerce

President Trump has built an aggressive enforcement framework specifically targeting platforms like yours. His January 31, 2020 Executive Order 13904 declared foreign e-commerce "is being exploited by traffickers to introduce contraband into the United States, and by foreign exporters and United States importers to avoid applicable customs duties, taxes, and fees." His October 2020 Presidential Memorandum directed maximum fines and civil penalties on e-commerce platforms.

On Day 1 of his second term, he signed the "America First Trade Policy" memorandum. By May 2025, he ended the $800 duty-free threshold for China with 120% tariffs. By August 2025, Executive Order 14324 extended this globally. Commerce Secretary Lutnick: "These foreign countries were sending in little packages for free and knocking out our mom and pop businesses across America."

Farfetch - UK-based, owned by South Korean Coupang, shipping from 50+ countries - falls directly within every definition his orders target.

Louisiana Congressional Delegation with Direct Jurisdiction

Senator Bill Cassidy sits on the Senate Finance Committee's Subcommittee on International Trade, Customs, and Global Competitiveness. He's up for re-election in 2026 facing a Trump-endorsed challenger. He introduced S.3841 in February 2026 amending the Tariff Act of 1930. His constituent casework gets results.

Senator John Kennedy authored the Accelerating Holding Foreign Companies Accountable Act. His May 2025 op-ed stated: "Republicans protecting Louisiana's interests from Chinese Communist Party influence." He said: "China is bent on exploiting American investors, so we need more accountability for foreign companies using American capital."

Representative Troy Carter sits on the House Energy and Commerce Committee with direct FTC oversight jurisdiction.

The 2026 Midterm Reality

The midterms are approaching. If Democrats retake the House or Senate, their playbook is to reflexively oppose whatever Trump proposes - but consumer protection against foreign platforms exploiting Americans is where that strategy backfires. They cannot be seen defending an overseas corporation over American consumers. You have no political protection either way.

Social Media Amplification to 200+ Million

Robby Starbuck (@robbystarbuck - 719K followers, regularly amplified by Elon Musk to 200M+) has forced corporate changes at Walmart, Ford, Harley-Davidson, John Deere, Tractor Supply, Lowe's, Caterpillar, Toyota, and Boeing through consumer campaigns. He investigates consumer complaints via direct message.

Donald Trump Jr. (@DonaldJTrumpJr - 15.6M followers) personally runs his accounts, boosts Starbuck's campaigns, and engages rapidly with follower content.

Dr. Phil McGraw (6M followers) features consumer fraud victims and accepts submissions at https://farfetch.my.salesforce.com/apex/AFSC__UrlCheck?id=05a30Sk000007yuWOIAY (drphilpodcast.com).

A documented thread: Foreign platform (UK-based, South Korean-owned) with FedEx-confirmed reputation for lazy packaging, creates phantom delivery scans, loses packages 50+ hours post-customs, forces American consumer to miss job interviews, stonewalls with offshore customer service, leaves credits "pending," delivers damaged goods, then ignores refund demand - framed within Trump's "America First" enforcement.

This is exactly the content they amplify.

Your Calculation Error

You calculated I'm "not worth your time."

Here's the actual calculation:

- Congressional constituent casework from Finance and Energy & Commerce committees creates regulatory scrutiny

- Social media documentation to 200M+ followers creates reputational damage exponentially exceeding one refund
- Every similar complaint I help amplify compounds your Coupang acquisition problems

You already went bankrupt once (August 2023 projections → December 2023 bailout) from accumulated customer experience failures. This is exactly how it happens again.

Final Deadline

Refund my full purchase amount within 24 hours, or I begin:

1. Formal constituent complaints to Cassidy, Kennedy, and Carter's offices
2. Social media documentation campaign via Starbuck, Trump Jr., Dr. Phil
3. Amplification of every future Farfetch customer complaint I can find

I told you I'd "escalate and escalate until the calculation changes." This is what that means.

Charly Wiz

I'm documenting the complete operational failure occurring across my three-shipment order, which now involves FedEx confirming your shipper restrictions are causing delivery chaos during a critical interview week.

Current Shipment Status:

Shipment 1: Cleared Memphis customs Wednesday 2/25 at 1:34 AM. Zero tracking updates for 50+ hours. Package physically lost in FedEx system post-customs clearance. I've now had to escalate directly to FedEx regional management to locate a package that successfully cleared customs two days ago but has vanished from their tracking system.

Shipment 2: Failed delivery attempt yesterday, out for delivery today during scheduled job interviews. Cannot arrange pickup due to your restrictions.

Shipment 3: Status unknown, delivery timeline unclear.

I had two interviews today and three on Monday. FedEx International delivers during morning hours - exactly when I'm in interviews. This is why "Hold at Facility" exists as a standard shipping option. But your restrictions have eliminated the one tool that would allow me to actually receive signature-required packages while managing a compressed job search timeline. I'm now forced to choose between employment opportunities and package receipt - a completely manufactured conflict created by your delivery restrictions.

FedEx Confirmation of Farfetch Restrictions:

I called FedEx customer service directly. They confirmed that Farfetch has applied shipper restrictions preventing me from:

- Requesting "Hold at Facility" for pickup
- Modifying delivery instructions
- Scheduling specific delivery times

FedEx explicitly stated these are shipper-imposed restrictions, not carrier limitations. Your restrictions are now directly causing a package to sit lost in Memphis while I'm forced to miss job interviews or miss deliveries.

Customer Service Call - "Barbara"

I called your customer service line seeking help with the restrictions. The representative (who identified herself as "Barbara" - obviously not her actual name based on her accent) robotically repeated she could "guide me through the process." When I explained I'd already attempted that exact process multiple times and needed her as the shipper to contact FedEx and remove restrictions, she just looped back to the same script. She claimed Farfetch "cannot call FedEx" - which is absurd since you're the shipper with the corporate account who applied these restrictions in the first place.

Zero authority to escalate. Zero ability to deviate from script. Complete stonewalling disguised as "assistance."

The $60 Promotional Credit:

Four days ago you promised via email to credit my account $60 for the promotional discount issue. The credit still shows as "pending." Even your own remediation requires constant monitoring to ensure execution.

What This Demonstrates:

Every single touchpoint proves the same pattern: nothing moves forward without relentless customer pressure. Packages sit lost post-customs. Credits stay "pending" indefinitely. Customer service representatives recite scripts but cannot actually solve problems. Your delivery restrictions create impossible conflicts with basic life obligations like job interviews. And now I'm personally coordinating with FedEx regional management to locate a package that cleared customs in your shipper's hub two days ago.

This is exactly the operational dysfunction that led to your August 2023 projection of $800 million in cash followed by a December bankruptcy bailout. When basic logistics, customer service, and internal execution all require customers to personally manage every step - while simultaneously navigating employment searches and other responsibilities - those customers simply leave. And in aggregate, that's precisely what happened.

I need:

1. Immediate removal of shipper restrictions on all three shipments so I can arrange FedEx facility pickup
2. Location and status of the package that's been dark since clearing Memphis customs 50+ hours ago
3. Actual processing of the $60 credit that's been "pending" for four days

I've CC'd this to the same distribution as my previous email, including your largest competitor who is no doubt interested in ongoing documentation of why Farfetch customers continue abandoning your platform.
